NEWS IN BRIEF...

BEWARE OF SCAMMERS... Clay Electric is asking its members to be alert and wary of scammers who are attempting to collect personal information by telling the member they represent Clay Electric and an overdue bill needs to be paid. Recently, several members in the Salt Springs District were called by someone who claimed they represented the co-op but wouldn't identify themselves. The caller attempted to obtain personal information like a Social Security number and credit card and bank account numbers. If a representative of Clay Electric calls a member, they'll identify themselves. The co-op representative may request the member's last four digits of their Social Security number, but only to verify their identity. If you receive a call from someone claiming they represent Clay Electric and they request personal information, get the person's name, hang up and call Clay Electric. The number is listed on each member's monthly bill statement. We urge our members to be very cautious about giving out personal information over the phone, especially to someone who claims immediate action is required to pay a bill.

PARTICIPATING IN PARADE OF SENIOR SERVICES...

Clay Electric participated in the annual Parade of Senior Services in March at the Central Florida Community College. The day-long event is organized by the Ocala Recreation and Parks Department. Between 65 and 100 mostly non-profit service organizations that cater to the region's "seniors community" participated.

CEC's John Bennett at the Parade of Senior Services.

Seniors obtained information on topics like hearing testing, nursing homes, local, state and federal governmental agencies, hospitals and health organizations. Clay Electric became one of the event's sponsors about eight years ago. "The program is mostly to relay information to our retired community to help them be better informed," said John Bennett, Clay Electric's member relations representative in the Salt Springs District. The Parade of Senior Services program started about 1982 and was originally held at the Paddock Mall in Ocala.

YOUNGSTERS LEARN ABOUT LINEMEN'S DUTIES...

Clay Electric lineman Damian Stewart visited Clay Hill Elementary in Clay County on Feb. 26 to do a program on the cooperative and his duties as a lineman. He spoke to about 60 kindergarten students, including his 6-year-old son Eli, who tried on his dad's protective gloves, safety harness and hard hat. Eli also holds a fiberglass extend stick that's used in line work to operate energized equipment from a safe distance. Stewart's presentation included a message about being safe around electricity. Photos by Lea Rhoden with Clay Hill Elementary School.

Assignment of Capital Credits reflects your co-op's unique non-profit status

Each year the co-op provides written notification to its members of the amount of Capital Credits assigned to their account for the previous year. The assignment of Capital Credits reflects the money remaining after all expenses are paid. In the future, as the financial condition of the co-op permits, the Capital Credits will be refunded. For example, $5 million was refunded earlier this year to members who received service between the years 1986 and 2008.

A special mailing (a post card) is used to notify members of 2009 who we no longer serve. Members of 2009 who still receive electric service from the co-op are notified of their assignment of Capital Credits on their May electric bill statement.

Therefore, if you received service from the co-op during 2009, the amount assigned to your account for that year is printed on your electric bill statement following the message "Capital Credits..." If you became a member of the co-op after Dec. 31, 2009, there will be no notification of Capital Credits on your May bill statement.

If you have more than one account with the same member number, the assignment will be reflected on the account with the most recent connect date.

The assignment of Capital Credits is an important and distinctive benefit of being a member of a non-profit electric cooperative. As a result, at the end of each year, when it's determined how much total revenue exceeds total expenses, the difference is assigned to members as Capital Credits based on the amount each member was billed for electricity during the year. If you were being served by a municipal utility or investor-owned utility, you would not be receiving an assignment of Capital Credits, or a pro-rata share of a Capital Credits refund. As a result of receiving service from Clay Electric, you receive some of the most competitive electric rates in the state, plus Capital Credits refunds.

If you have any questions about Capital Credits, please contact your nearest district office. Our customer service representatives will be happy to answer your questions.

Is a hurricane in our future?

We're entering the summer months, which increases the threat of tropical storms and hurricanes to our area.

I've wondered how those hurricane forecasters can predict months in advance how many hurricanes will occur during the June 1 through November 30 hurricane season.

Perhaps the best known hurricane prognosticator is Dr. William Gray with Colorado State University. Each year he issues a seasonal hurricane outlook. He forecasts that there will be 15 named storms, eight hurricanes and four major hurricanes this year. He also predicts a 69 percent chance of a major hurricane hitting a U.S. coastline, a 45 percent chance that a major hurricane will hit the East Coast (including peninsular Florida) and a 44 percent chance that a major hurricane will strike the Gulf Coast from the Florida panhandle to Brownsville, Texas.

Last year, the Old Farmer's Almanac (which has been around for over 200 years) predicted that a major hurricane will strike our state in September. The Almanac also predicted a colder-than-usual winter, which was on the mark! Let's hope they're wrong on their September hurricane prediction.

We'll publish a special hurricane section in our July Kilowatt newsletter. We encourage you to read it and think about your preparations. Hurricanes aren't something to take lightly because these storms can kill and cause severe damage to homes and property. Power outages won't last hours, but days, because of the serious damage these storms can do.

Former Florida Gov. Jeb Bush put this issue in perspective in a 2005 speech: "Failure to prepare for a hurricane could be the difference between life and death. Ultimately, if individuals don't create their own hurricane plan, this is all for naught. We live in paradise, and this is the price we pay."

Take control of your summer power usage by following these tips...

Summer is a fun time of year, but it also means hot, humid days, afternoon thunderstorms, plenty of pesky mosquitoes...and higher electricity bills.

You can't control the heat, storms or humidity, but you do have some control over your summertime electricity usage.

It's a fact that as the outdoors warms up, your home experiences more heat gain. In response, you adjust the thermostat to remain comfortable.

Utilities often suggest a thermostat setting of 78 degrees. Why 78? An inactive person begins to perspire when the temperature rises above 78. But what happens if you're active and get too warm? You lower the thermostat. However, for every degree the thermostat is set below 78, the run time of your air conditioning unit or heat pump increases 5 to 8 percent. This ups your electricity usage.

Here's a few suggestions to help you lower your electrical usage during the cooling season:

- Have your air conditioning system serviced annually.
- The ductwork should be inspected to make sure there are no duct leaks. If leaks are found have them sealed with approved aluminum tape or mastic. Duct tape isn't a fix-all for air conditioning ductwork.
- Keep all windows and doors closed when the air conditioner is in operation. Why air-condition the outdoors?
- Change the filter(s) monthly or whenever they show signs of dust accumulation. Higher quality air filters trap more dust particles, and they need changing as often as lesser quality filters.
- Keep air supply registers open to all rooms, even those not frequently occupied. Closing off air supply registers increases the air pressure on the duct system, and this ups the chances of duct leakage.
- Keep all interior doors to rooms with supply air registers open, unless a return air vent is located within the room. Rooms with doors closed and a supply air register is located within the room and no return air vent, doesn't allow the air to be easily returned to the unit whereby decreasing the air circulation of the system and the room temperature increases. Sound familiar?

Utilities recommend a setting of 78 degrees.

If your home was built before 2003, it's likely the ceiling penetrations which allow the placement of electrical wiring, plumbing stacks, light fixture boxes, etc. weren't sealed. These penetrations allow hot, humid air from the attic to enter the conditioned areas. This increases the run time of your air conditioning unit. The reverse occurs in the winter. Warm conditioned air from inside the home moves toward the attic. To reduce this heat transfer, all penetrations into the attic should be sealed. That's why building codes were changed in 2003 to require the sealing of all ceiling penetrations.

For homeowners who have attic exhaust fans, unsealed ceiling penetrations allow conditioned air to be pulled into the attic. The more conditioned air that's exhausted from the home, the more outside air is drawn into the home through cracks and crevices in the home. This outside air (warmth, moisture and dust) forces your air conditioner to operate for longer periods to maintain your desired comfort level (your thermostat setting).

If the air infiltration is greater than your air conditioner can handle, the home gets warmer and you're less comfortable. You choose to lower the thermostat, which increases the run time of the air conditioner. The result: electrical usage increases. It's a costly cycle that can hit you in your pocketbook, if not addressed.

You can't control the summer storms or the outside humidity, but you can get a handle on your energy usage and lower your monthly bills. As for those pesky mosquitoes, try insect repellent!

Sherman Phillips, Clay Electric's Manager of Energy Services, provided these energy tips. A longer version of this story is available on the co-op's web site (clayelectric.com), and it provides more energy-saving tips. The co-op wants you to get the most benefit from your energy dollars, and this information can help.

Despite the feel good idea of using the sun and wind as energy sources to replace conventional generation, some folks choose to ignore...

THE REALITIES OF RENEWABLE ENERGY

Forcing Florida utilities to replace their baseload generation with renewable energy sources will result in consumers paying higher electricity bills

By Wayne Mattox, Kilowatt editor

The idea that Florida can replace nearly a quarter of its conventional electricity generation with renewable energy sources has gotten a lot of favorable press. Last month, a North Florida newspaper editorialized that renewable energy sources like solar and biofuel resources offer great potential. They wrote that the Florida Legislature should require utilities to obtain 20 percent of their electricity from renewable sources by 2020. The editorial urged that a “renewable energy standard” be created for the state’s utilities to follow because 29 other states already have a renewable standard.

A renewable energy standard would require utilities to obtain 20 percent or more of their total generation capacity from renewable energy sources, such as photovoltaic panels, wind turbines, biomass generators and landfill gas. The editorial also claimed that a renewable energy standard would put Florida on a path to prosperity and create many clean jobs.

While the media likes to cheerlead the merits of renewable energy, there is another side to this story that deserves attention.

Gov. Charlie Crist has championed renewable energy options and efforts to address global warming since he took office in 2006. Last year, an energy bill was introduced that would have required utilities to generate 20 percent of their electricity from renewable sources by 2020 and it promoted new solar development. It was approved by the Senate but the House never took the bill up before the regular session ended. This year, lawmakers have been embroiled in battles over the state’s budget, education bills, finding ways to revive the state’s economy and address high unemployment.

While it might seem like Florida lawmakers have been dragging their feet on a renewable energy standard, it’s likely they’re simply not enthusiastic about imposing mandates on utilities that would result in higher priced electricity for consumers, especially at a time of high unemployment and a weak economy.

Actually, when it comes to using renewable energy sources, the state’s larger utilities haven’t been waiting on legislative mandates. They’ve been pursuing renewable energy options by building solar projects and utilizing biomass and landfill gas for small generation plants. Seminole Electric Co-op, which supplies electricity to Clay Electric and nine other electric co-ops in Florida, is a leader in this regard, with 4 percent of its generation coming from sources like biomass and landfill gas generators. For Seminole, landfill gas is one of the most reliable and cost-effective forms of renewable energy.

Other utilities are moving forward with renewable energy projects. Last fall, a large investor-owned utility opened a large solar plant in Arcadia, Fla. that’s capable of generating 25 megawatts of electricity. A 10-megawatt solar plant at the Kennedy Space Center near Titusville began operating in April that’s capable of
